- Review, update, document the position description (record information in system of record, as appropriate)
  - Job analysis should define the purpose of the role and validate the minimum and preferred requirements for the position. Physical and mental requirements should also be considered.
- Create and document the recruitment plan
  - What sources were used? Why were they selected? Are they specific to the profession/discipline?
  - Keep copies of advertisements and/or receipts of payments; keep emails distributed to listservs, lists of schools or chairs contacted, conferences attended where the position was discussed, tweets, etc.
  - If posted online, visit site to confirm placement (Take a screenshot and save as part of the hiring file.)
- All hiring officials, search chairs, and committee members must have taken required training
  - If committee composition changes during the process make sure this and the reason is noted.
- Create a screening criteria worksheet from job requirements and discuss interpretation of criteria where potentially ambiguous or qualitative prior to reviewing applications
- Record who screens the applications, when they were screened, and how the applicant fared (can be narrative of process and summary notes on each applicant)
  - Did they meet minimum qualifications? Did they meet preferred qualifications?
  - Will they be invited for interview?
    - How was it decided who would be interviewed?
- Are there any veterans in the applicant pool? Were they given the appropriate preference?
- Communicate applicant statuses with HR or other support representative on a regular basis throughout the screening process
  - Where possible make sure applicants are notified of their status through use of system emails or tailored communications from the department. If emails/letters are sent outside of the system, the content of the letter, the distribution list, and the date should be recorded.
- Before any interviews are held, create consistent interview questions or general lines of inquiry that will be discussed with all candidates
  - These should be recorded and kept as part of the hiring file
- Create consistent (not necessarily identical based on legitimate business reasons) interview day agendas and keep the documentation as part of the hiring file
- Keep records of all hiring official/chair/committee contact with applicants and candidates
- Take notes during interviews and keep as part of the hiring file (Gender neutral, culturally sensitive, no discriminatory implications or inferences, professional tone)
- Record feedback from stakeholders not represented on the committee (Name, role, date met with candidate) and keep as part of the hiring file
- Document reference checks (Who was contacted, who contacted them, when were they contacted, what questions were asked, what were the responses, etc.)
